Inhalt
In recent years, corporate sustainability reporting has moved from a voluntary activity, prone to “greenwashing”, to a regulated field. The European Union has been particularly instrumental in promoting regulations on sustainability reporting, as becomes manifest in the recent Corporate Sustainability Reporting Directive (CSRD). This course aims to provide an overview and to analyse current dynamic developments in the area of sustainability reporting. This involves some background on the development and theories of (voluntary) sustainability reporting, insights into current and planned regulations, standards, guidances and frameworks as well as actual practices of sustainability reporting. In this course, cases of companies’ sustainability reports are presented and discussed and academic research is mobilized to reflect on current (and future) developments in regulation/standards and practice.
Lernziele

After successful participation in this course, students

- Explain the development of sustainability reporting and understand the limits of voluntary reporting in this area.
- Compare different frameworks, guidelines and standards of sustainability reporting and evaluate them based on theories of sustainability reporting.
- Analyze sustainability reports of listed companies and assess their content in light of relevant standards.
- Develop suggestions on how current practices of sustainability reporting and reporting standards in this area could be improved.
- Present their insights into practical cases, reporting standards and research studies effectively in oral presentations and short essays.
